We're all affected - but there's a solution for everyone

Benjamins, first homebuyers and people who just need a safe roof over their heads. What happens to one of us, affects everybody.

It's time to fix the housing system.

- Ordinary Australians are being locked out of homeownership
- Renters are missing out and having to move from house to house
- And there's nowhere else for many people to go.

First name:

A very exciting night is fast approaching. Federal Budget night! It's the time of the year when the Treasurer works with the rest of the Government to put together their plan for the year ahead. They decide where they're going to spend the money and the kind of things they're going to invest - and we want them to have Australia's housing system front of mind as they're developing...

A coalition of housing, homelessness and welfare organisations has developed a research-based campaign to ensure housing solutions that will enable every Australian to be housed are at the centre of the debate in the next federal election. This campaign is designed to mobilise the combined strength of the community and housing sectors and other allies. The more organisations who join, the greater our impact will be.

We have a real opportunity

- Housing affordability is now a top tier political issue – driven largely by rising home purchase prices and the growing reality that young people are being locked out of the market.
- This provides the sector with an opportunity to put rental affordability clearly into the public debate and ensure housing solutions are adopted that meet the needs of low and middle income Australians.
